Company	What Was Stolen	Steps To Take
1: Starwood Hotels Sheraton, W, St. Regis, Westin, Element, Aloft, Le Meredian and others.	327 million customers' personal information including email addresses, itineraries, passport numbers and birthdays was stolen. Initial reports blame the Chinese government.	Customers should call 877 273-9481 to see if their personal information has been stolen. Starwood is offering a year's free membership in WebWatcher, an ID tracking service. Consider freezing your credit and changing your passport number.
2: MyFitnessPal Fitness app and website owned by Under Armour designed to track fitness goals and count calories.	150 million users, many referred to MyFitnessPal by their family physicians, had user names, email addresses and passwords stolen.	Change your MyFitnessPal password. Do not use your Facebook account to log into MyFitnessPal and other unrelated apps and websites. (Access your Facebook settings and disconnect those links.) Be wary of emails containing links or attachments that claim to be from MyFitnessPal.
3: Quora The website and email service where users post questions and answers.	100 million Quora accounts were compromised, exposing users' names, email addresses, their account history and in some cases, their passwords.	Change your Quora password and other accounts where you use the same password. Be wary of emails containing links or attachments that claim to be from Quora.
4: Facebook Facebook also admits deep personal information about users was sold to customers.	Because of a flaw in the way Facebook worked, hackers could view personal information for 50 million users even if their accounts were set to "private."	Change your Facebook password. Review your Facebook, WhatsApp and Instagram privacy settings. (All three are owned by Facebook.) Be wary about personal information you post to your Facebook feed.
5: TicketFly Online service that sells tickets to concerts and other live events.	Information on 26 million buyer and seller accounts including names, usernames, phone numbers and billing addresses was stolen.	Change your TicketFly password on every website where you use the same password. Be wary of emails containing links or attachments that claim to be from TicketFly.
6: US Postal Service USPS's website and mobile app real-time notification service.	Personal data for 12 million USPS "Informed Delivery" customers was stolen including user names, passwords and access to images of mail about to be delivered.	If you use USPS "Informed Delivery," change your password. If you do not use the service, some experts recommend signing up for the service so a fraudster can't claim your account, pretending to be you. Create fake answers to the four personal questions required to complete the account set up.
